Coits and other garden games

Coits is a really fun game but if you don't have a set, you can make your ownor a similar game! A game where you have to throw something to score.

Empty drinks bottles make good targets to throw small hoops over or throw or roll a ball at to knock down. You can make your own bowling alley this way! Fill the bottles with sand or earth to make them stable. Write numbers on each bottle to score points.

If you haven't got any empty bottles, mark our areas with cushions/T-shirts/ T towels.....anything. Put a label on each area to give it a score eg. red T-shirt is 5 points; blue T-shirt is 2. If you want to practise some maths you could score in tens.... Red T-shirt is 50 points; blue is 20! Thrown balls or bean bags.

Other ideas for practising bowling or throwing skills is to take a big cardboard box and cut out arches along the bottom to roll a ball through. Or you could open up the box so you have one long, flat piece. Cut holes in it the size of a tennis ball or small ball. Then lean it against a wall and see how good your aim is by throwing the ball through the holes.

Give points to the arches or the holes and take it in turns to throw 5 balls each. What is your score?

Flower pots or empty tins are also good for throwing balls ator in!
